

Health practitioners authorised to give evidence

A-Z by Surname

State Insurance
Regulatory Authority

There are restrictions on health practitioners who may give evidence in court and other dispute resolution proceedings under the Motor Accident Injuries Act 2017 (‘the Act’). Evidence given by a health practitioner in relation to a medical matter is only admissible if it is given by a treating health practitioner of the injured person, or if the practitioner is authorised by the Motor Accident Guidelines 2017 (‘the Guidelines’) to give evidence [section 7.52 of the Act].

The Authority may appoint a health practitioner to its list of health practitioners authorised to give evidence if it is satisfied that the health practitioner meets the eligibility requirements outlined in part 8 of the Motor Accident Guidelines. The Authority will publish on its website the names of all health practitioners authorised to give evidence and information relevant to their role as health practitioners authorised to give evidence.

A health practitioner is not authorised to give evidence in proceedings unless the practitioner is authorised under the Motor Accident Guidelines at the time the evidence is given. For evidence given by written report, this means that the health practitioner must be authorised at the time they examine the claimant and write the report. The Authority appoints health practitioners it is satisfied are suitably qualified to give evidence.

A list of health practitioners authorised to give evidence is published below, including both active and inactive health practitioners and the dates for which they are authorised.
